

One

"Churchill? Winston Churchill?" said Walden. "Here!"

"Yes, my lord," the butler said.

"Send the blighter away," Walden said. "I'm not at home." He turned and walked to the window, thinking: Young whippersnapper, I don't know where he gets the nerve, first calling on me in London then following me down here, he knows damn well I won't see him -

The butler coughed.

Walden looked at him with irritation. "Still here?"

"Mr Churchill told me you'd be 'not at home', my lord, and said I must give you this."

Walden advised that the butler was carrying a letter on a tray. "Leave it back to him - no, wait." He had seen the seal on the envelope, and for one the Earl of Walden was intimidated. He took the letter and opened it.

Buckingham Palace

24 May 1914

My dear Walden,

You will see young Winston.

George R.

Walden recognised the handwriting. It was the King's. He hesitated only a moment longer, then said: "Ask Mr Churchill to come in."

Churchill is now First Lord of the Admiralty, which means not that he ~~was~~ is a hero but that he is in charge of Britain's navy. He is of course a Minister in the Liberal government, so from Walden's point of view he represents the people who are trying to destroy England. However, Churchill wants Walden to do a job which transcends domestic politics. He explains that he has arranged for a young Russian admiral to come to London for secret naval talks — at least, "naval" talks was the original proposal, but Churchill is partitioning the whole thing into a defence treaty. The admiral is Prince Alexei Andreevitch Obolensky, aged 30, a nephew and favourite of the Czar and a distant relation of Lydia. It is the Czar who has invited, in a personal telegram to King George V, that the English side should be represented in the negotiations by Walden.

To observe the real purpose of the visit Obolensky — a very eligible bachelor — will stay at Walden's town house and be introduced to London society, while it is whispered about that he is looking for a wife.

Walden is no stranger to the world of international diplomacy, but even he is somewhat awed by the <sup>importance</sup> magnitude of his task, which is no less than to get the Russians on our team. It would be his strong personal reason for wanting this: he loves Russia, his wife is Russian, and he has rather a lot of money invested in the Trans-Siberian Railway. But more importantly, it seems to him that if Russia remains neutral, Germany will conquer Europe.

+

Lydia leaves the men talking politics in the morning-room and walks into the garden. She walks around the rectory, lonely at home and wanders through the landscaped park. The mention of Andrew has unnerved her: she remembers him as a ten-year-old boy at her wedding, and she remembers that as the unhappiest day of her life. She was coerced into marrying Walden although she was in love with another man. Walden knows nothing of this, but Lydia, despite appearances, has nourished the memory of their adolescent passion.

Lydia sees Charlotte deep in conversation with Belinda, and thinks: Please, Lord, let me keep my secret.

+

Charlotte and Belinda are talking about being debutantes (both are due to be presented at court this summer), marriage (which is supposed to follow soon afterwards) and sex. This last is a subject upon which they are breathtakingly ignorant. (No decent mother children learned about sex despite the notorious Victorian conspiracy of silence, but Charlotte and Belinda are unusually protected.) They realize that bodies grow inside women, but cannot imagine how they come out. Charlotte knows where eggs emerge from chickens, and Belinda one saw a cow drop a calf, but they agree that their own bodies have no apertures big enough for a baby. They wonder whether they suffer from a congenital deformity. There is no one they can consult about this. They do not consider the question of how a baby gets started: they assume it happens spontaneously when a girl reaches the age of about 21, and for them this explains why girls are pressured to marry at 19 or 20.

Belinda is merely idly curious, but Charlotte is made of sterner stuff. There are forbidden books in a locked cupboard in the library, she says; I know where the key is. Belinda immediately gets cold feet but Charlotte insists. They get the books and sneak upstairs. (Annie, who is supposed to be reprimanding them, is meeting her boyfriend in the wood.) Charlotte leads the way through the dimmed nursery to an attic which used to be her secret hiding-place when she was little. From here you can see across the several acres of roof which cover Warden Hall. There is a way to get up here from the kitchen, all across roofs, says Charlotte. They look at the forbidden books, but they get little help from the internal diagrams in the medical textbooks and none at all from the bizarre, and to them incomprehensible, pornographic novel.

+

Meanwhile Feliks' boat is docking at Dover.

The Swiss anarchist have learned, through a traitor in the Orléans, of Orléan's planned talks with Warden. Feliks is horrified by the prospect of a European war. The idea of young men being sent, by Emperors and Czars and Prime Ministers, to be killed and maimed in a cause which means nothing to them, is just the kind of thing that makes Feliks an anarchist. As far as he is concerned, Orléan and Warden are conspiring to murder thousands of Russian people. So he plans a kill them both.

The effects of such a murder would be greater than might immediately be apparent. Firstly, it would of course bring the talks to an abrupt halt. Secondly, once it became known that the perpetrator was a refugee Russian anarchist, the old quarrel between Britain and Russia about expatriate revolutionaries would flare up again and probably prevent the talks from continuing with replacement negotiations. Thirdly, Feliks (or, if he is dead, his friends) will announce that Orléan was killed because he was scheming to drag the Russian people into a war they do not want; and human popular reaction to that might set off a chain-reaction of revolt leading ultimately to revolution.

Feliks is tense, excited, apprehensive and happy. He may die soon, but for now life has suddenly started opening doors again.

As he sets foot on English soil for the first time in his life, there is something else on his mind. The woman he loved, nineteen years ago, married an Englishman. Feliks never knew the man's name, but he heard they had gone to England. He remembers how she used to yell "Help!" at the moment of climax. Now, after all this time, he will be in the same country as she. Will he see her?

Her name was Lydia.

Two

Felix is at Victoria Station for the arrival of Ostromov. Ostromov is travelling in a private coach (borrowed from the King) at the back end of the train. He steps out of the coach and into Warden's carriage. Felix gets a glimpse of a handsome, expensively-dressed young man. Two servants (who travel with Ostromov) load a mountain of luggage on to the carriage and it drives away. Felix, on a bicycle, follows it through the crowded London streets to a large house on the edge of St James's Park - a house which, he is soon able to establish, is the town home of the Earl of Warden.

Inside the house a robust hydria greets Ostromov. He is a rather appealing young man. He talks about Russia; and this pillar of the Czarist regime turns out to be something of a radical. He speaks earnestly of the need for change in Russia: for land reform, mechanised agriculture, modern industry and parliamentary democracy. But hydria is thinking: How he possibly know about me?

When Charlotte appears we find out why this handsome, charming, wealthy prince is still a bachelor at thirty: he is chronically shy with girls. When he sees Charlotte - who has turned into a real dish - he drops his bearing, flusters, and suddenly acquires a thick Russian accent. But now Charlotte's hidden talents begin to emerge, and with her unique naive charm she puts him at ease. Hearing this, hydria and Warden exchange a secret smile of pride.

Outside, Felix walks in the park and ponders what he has seen. Hearty Ostromov is wary of showing himself in public: he will not be an easy target. (Perhaps the possibility of assassination has occurred to him too.) Getting close to him will tax Felix' ingenuity.

+

Warden and Ostromov begin their talk, and Ostromov springs a surprise.

The Russian navy's great long-term aim is to have a warm-water port. They have their Black Sea coast, but the Black Sea is an inland sea connected with the Mediterranean only by a narrow strait, the Bosphorus, off Constantinople, and both banks of the Bosphorus are held by Turkey. Russia has been supporting Slav nationalism in the Balkans, in the hope that when the Slavs throw the Turks out, Russia will have free passage through the strait; but better than new control of the area would be Russian control; and now Olmec announces that if Russia is to fight on the Allied side in the coming war, the price of her participation will be British recognition of the Balkans as a Russian sphere of influence. Walden is taken aback by this. He tells Olmec it's a bit, then they adjourn, for Walden must discuss it with Churchill.

+

Felix buys a gram. & reads that O will be at court, also C.

+

Charlotte is presented at court. This is the biggest and most gorgeous ceremony of British royalty, when the aristocratic girls of the kingdom parade before the monarch at Buckingham Palace. "Court dress" is obligatory. For women this means a white dress with a low bodice and a train three to four yards long, plus a tiara with three white plumes. Men wear a uniform if they are entitled to one, otherwise velvet knee-breeches with white silk stockings, and all their medals. Senior politicians, nobles and diplomats also attend. Olmec is there as a member of the delegation from the Russian Embassy.

Meanwhile, outside in The Mall, Pritchard (acting as footmen tonight) waits with the Waldens' carriage (among a hundred or so others). He is watched by Felix.

In the main part of the ceremony the King and Queen sit on thrones while the debutantes pass in front of them one by one. Charlotte's debut is marred by an (historically true) incident. The girl ahead of her in line suddenly drops to one knee in front of the King and says: "Your Majesty, for God's sake stop torturing women!" She is hustled away by his footmen. The royal couple pretend not to notice, but Charlotte is flustered. She assumes the girl is completely mad, and for now no one will tell her differently.

Pritchard goes into the park to take a leak and is hit over the head by Felix. Felix ties and gaggs him and puts on his living coat and top hat. Then he goes to the Walden carriage.

At the supper, Walden comes to Churchill and tells him of Olmec's proposal. Walden suggests he should offer to ~~not~~ declare the Bosphorus an international waterway with free passage to all nations in peacetime guaranteed to jointly by Britain and Russia. Okay, says Churchill.

Feliks hears the call: "The Earl of Walden's carriage." He drives up to the Palace gates. His four passengers get in. He drives away. He stops the carriage in the middle of the park. He pulls his scarf up over his face (so that the women, whom he does not plan to kill, will not be able to describe him afterwards). He jumps down from the seat, takes his gun from his pocket, and flings open the carriage door.

Three

Lydia screams "Help!" in Russian - just as he used to when Feliks made love to her. Feliks freezes. Lydia! Here in this carriage! My own Lydia - Walden, who is never frozen with shock, looks out with his cane, hitting Feliks' wrist. Feliks drops the gun. He has forgotten the assassination and is staring at Lydia, who is still screaming hysterically. Walden hits him again. Feliks runs away.
*

Feliks remembers the last time he saw Lydia. She came to his dingy room and matched an hour with him on the way to a reception at the British Embassy. That night Feliks was arrested by the Otrana. They beat the sides of his feet in an attempt to make him reveal the names of other anarchists. The torture stopped without explanation, and six weeks later - equally inexplicably - he was released. On the day he came out he learned that, the day before, Lydia had left for England with her new husband.

*

Walden, Moran and Churchill sit in the library. Churchill is mad at Walden for almost letting Moran get killed. Walden is mad too, at himself and at the unknown assassin who hit Irkhan over the head and bashed Lydia half to death. They agree that Moran should be moved into an hotel for the time being. Churchill tells Walden: "It is your responsibility to make sure the security arrangements are watertight." Moran recalls that the assassin's gun was actually pointed at Walden. "I think he wants to kill you, too, Walden," says Moran. "You should also be guarded."

*

Lydia has not recognized Feliks (except perhaps unconsciously). She faints when be run away. She believes that what happened was an attempted robbery. (So does Charlotte.) Lydia has been put to bed with a dose of laudanum. She dreams about him. When Warden comes to bed and caresses her, she makes love to him without waking up.

+

Next day Charlotte - who is reading the newspaper for the first time in her life - reads that the "incident" at the house was a suffragette protest. She talks to Pittman about it. He explains the reference to starving women: suffragettes who are jailed go on hunger strike, and consequently are force-fed by a degrading and painful process. Charlotte refuses to believe this.

That night her coming-out ball is held at Clarendon hotel. It is a glittering occasion, with all the girls in fabulons gowns and the young men in white-tie-and-tails. Blinda is there. She has joined the "fast" set: she wears ankle-revealing dresses, does the Turkey Trot, smokes cigarettes in restaurants, and goes to boxing matches. Since that day at Warden Hall she has learned the sexual facts of life, and now she relays them to Charlotte, who is stunned.

On the way home from the ball at dawn Charlotte is horrified to see a woman sleeping on the pavement. Manya reluctantly explains that thousands of men, women and children have nowhere to sleep but the streets of London. Charlotte simply did not know that people could be that poor. She insists on stopping the carriage and speaking to the woman.

It turns out to be Annie, the housemaid who used to depuitize for Manya at Warden Hall. She explains that she got pregnant and was fired without a "character". She subsequently had a miscarriage and is now destitute. Charlotte says, come home with me. Annie knows better than to accept. Charlotte says, come to the house at 4.30 tomorrow - at least I can give you money for lodgings.

Charlotte is ground out by the revelations of the night. Next day she screams at her parents: "Why didn't anybody tell me?" It seems to her that her education so far has been little better than a conspiracy to deceive her. She accuses her parents of murdering Annie's baby.

Warden and Lydia are somewhat thrown. Pregnant housemaids are always fired, it's the only way to run a respectable house. But in truth they cannot feel proud of themselves.

Walden in particular is really sick by all this. First an anarchist attacks his family in the middle of London, then his daughter rejects his moral standards as evil. What is happening to the world?

Charlotte announces that she wants to take an Annie as her personal maid. Lydia is aghast; Walden less so; reluctantly they agree.

*

Feliks is really down. He has lost the element of surprise. Reading the sketchy papers he notes that the name of Prince Adams no longer appears in guest lists: the prince has obviously gone into hiding. The two human servants no longer go in and out at the service entrance, so Adams has obviously been moved. This is hardly surprising but it puts Feliks in a quandary. Adams could be anywhere, and Feliks cannot check all the hotels, every cabinet minister's residence, every London house owned by a Russian diplomat, etc.

So, in desperation, he decides to ask Lydia.

He knocks on the door.

Four

He knocks on the door (at a time when he knows Walden is out). He gives his name as Constantine Dmitrich Levin, and tells the butler that he must see lady Walden immediately, it is a matter of urgency, and he is sure she will remember him from St Petersburg. (The name he has chosen will be vaguely familiar to her for it is that of a character in Anna Karenina.)

The butler shows him into the morning-room where Lydia is writing letters. She looks up with an automatic smile, then frowns, then turns as white as a sheet when she recognizes him.

Eventually she tells Feliks why she married Walden. Her father had found out that she was having an affair with Feliks. The old count forbade her to see Feliks. Obviously, she rushed straight to Feliks' house, to be told by his landlady that he had been arrested as a subversive. Her father calmly informed her that Feliks was being tortured. Naturally she was distraught. The count then told her that the young Earl & Walden had formally asked permission to pay court to her. Agree to marry him, said Lydia's father, and I guarantee the torture will stop immediately and the man will be released as soon as you leave for England. Of course Lydia agreed.

As she tells this story, watching Feliks' face, she feels more and more the desperate need to touch him, bite him, kiss him. She can hardly keep still.

Feliks is much moved by this story. He means to kiss her. No, she says; all that is half my life ago. Now that you know the truth, go away and never come back.

Feliks turns to go. Then: "I came to ask you something..." He reminds himself of the importance of his mission, and forces himself to repeat his prepared speech, a yarn about wanting to petition Orléan personally for the release of a young anarchist sailor who has been jailed. Lydia tells him Orléan is at the Savoy Hotel.

As Feliks leaves, Lydia thinks: Thank God, he hasn't guessed the truth.

+

From conversations with Annie, Charlotte is learning a great deal about poverty, sex and the role of women. But now that she is beginning to understand the world what can she do about it? She discovers that as a woman she cannot even vote! The action of Letitia de Vries, the debt in the carot incident, now appears in a different light. Charlotte calls on her. Since the incident, the de Vries family has been visited by "good" society, so they are delighted to see the daughter of the Earl of Walden. Mrs Parkhurst is there. Charlotte is ripe for conversion. She promises to go on the next suffragette demonstration.

+

Lydia thinks over her meeting with Feliks, suppressing (for the moment) her still-strong physical desire for him. She knows he was and no doubt still is an anarchist. Was he told her the truth about why he wants to visit Orléan? Perhaps he wants to murder Orléan. It might even have been Feliks in the park that night! The more she thinks about it the more worried she is that she may have betrayed Orléan to an assassin.

She tells Walden: "A man called this morning, a Russian whom I remembered vaguely from St Petersburg, asking for Orléan... I told him the Savoy Hotel, I hope that was all right..."

Walden says: "Don't worry about it."

Walden is cresting his anger. Things are getting on top of him. Orléan is taking an unconscionably long time to reply to the British counter-proposal.

It is now mid-day, and the Germans have completed the widening of the Kiel Canal, a strategically vital project which will enable their Dreadnoughts to pass between the North Sea and the Baltic. Every day which passes makes a deal with the Germans more urgent. The unknown assassin seems irresistibly daring and ingenious. Now once again he has found out where Utter is located. But perhaps Walden can turn this to advantage and catch the man...

+

Felix spends the day buying the materials necessary for a bomb and fits up half the night in his lodgings putting it together.

+

About now, Annie makes an error. During a political argument in the servants' hall she declares that Mrs Parkhurst is a "real lady"; she knows because Charlotte says so. Mignon reports to Lydia that Charlotte has met Mrs Parkhurst. Lydia is aghast. Charlotte is surprised and forbidden to leave the house alone.

+

Felix writes an envelope: "Miss Utter, Harry Hotel." He gives an usher a penny to deliver it in 15 minutes' time. By then Felix is in the hotel lobby, reading a newspaper and apparently waiting for someone. The boy comes in and hands over the letter at the desk. Felix watches curiously now: he hopes to follow the letter to Utter's suite. Suddenly the boy is surrounded by plain-clothes policemen who seem to have materialized out of the walls.

Walden is summoned from an office off the lobby. He asks questions too certain. He opens the envelope and finds it empty. He begins to suspect what this is all about. He looks around the lobby.

But the lobby is empty.

fine

Lydia finds herself longing to see Felix again. This feeling, and its unspoken guilt, make her cold toward her husband.

Walden moves Utter again. He also tells his butler: "If 'Mr henin' should call again, admit him, then tell kitchen immediately." He says to Feliks: "If 'Mr. Marin' calls, follow him when he leaves."

+

Feliks tries following Walden around for a couple of days. The first day Walden has lunch at his club, makes two calls in the afternoon, goes to the opera then a supper hall. Next day he leaves early in his car. Feliks follows him, but as soon as the car leaves (central London and picks up speed) Feliks cannot keep up on his bicycle. ~~Walden sees Annie?~~

There is nothing for it but to try Lydia again.

+

Charlotte is determined to go on the suffragette demonstration. The King has refused to give an audience to Mrs Pankhurst, so the suffragettes are marching on Buckingham Palace. Annie announces that Charlotte is in bed with a headache and must not be disturbed. Then Charlotte, weeping (<sup>a</sup>whiff of Annie's), sneaks out of the house.

+

Feliks sees his sister coming out of the side gate of the Walden house. "Nadia!" he says. She gives him a puzzled look and walks by. Feliks realizes that he has not seen his sister for twenty years, and she certainly no longer looks 18. So who is the girl who came out of the Walden house? He follows her.

The police have been ordered to repel the suffragettes with a minimum of arrests, because the women are more trouble in jail than out. Barring the weapon of arrest the police resort to violence, and idle male bystanders join in. Feliks sees Charlotte go down in a scuffle. He walks in and rescues her.

He takes her to a cheap cafe and buys her a cup of tea. They talk. He learns that she is Charlotte Walden. So Lydia has a daughter who looks like my sister... He asks her her exact date of birth. Then he knows: Charlotte is his, Feliks' daughter. He is Hirschenthal.

She is flummoxed by him, for he has answers to the questions which trouble her: why is there poverty? why are there wars? and why is sex secret?

Feliks says he knew Lydia in Russia long ago, and that Charlotte reminded him of his sister. Maybe we're related, Charlotte says idly. Feliks hesitates, then says, I doubt it.

They arrange to meet again.

+

Walden has gone to Walden Hall, which is Ahnau's new hideout. Ahnau, who is in daily contact with the (now by code) telegram via the German Embassy, presents a modified demand: German control of that area of the Balkans which is currently European Turkey. Walden asks him to consult with Churchill again.

+

Feliks faces a dilemma. He has found a daughter he never knew he had - and she may know where Ahnau is. Should he use her?

He sees the evening paper: the Archduke Franz-Ferdinand has been assassinated at Sarajevo. ~~Bojan is not there~~.

He must write her.

He tells her that the assassination in Sarajevo means war. He explains how he plans to keep Russia out of the war by killing Ahnau. Charlotte looks troubled. Feliks puts it arithmetically: one death will save millions; besides, Ahnau deserves it for supporting the war. Charlotte says: "You're right."

"Then tell me where Ahnau is," says Feliks.

Charlotte says: "I don't know." but I'll find out.

SIX. TO THE PALEST. +

Walden and Churchill come up with a new counter-proposal: German control of the Bosphorus with plus Constantinople. Walden thinks the Russians will go for that. Churchill says he must get Cabinet approval.

Walden walks around London, thinking. His wife is cold as ice, his daughter seems to be going crazy, and the assassin is still at large. The German Kaiser has promised to back Austria in any reprisals against Serbia. Walden's world is falling apart and there seem to be nothing he can do about it.

He finds himself outside the house in Sir John's Wood which he gave to Annie (and in 1892). He wonders what she is like now. My God, she must be fifty.

A hack draws up and a woman gets out. Walking from a distance, Walden recognizes Annie. She is rather plump and a shade overdressed but the smile she gives the driver bogs at Walden's heartstrings. She looks in his direction. He turns quickly and walks away, not knowing whether she has seen him.

When he gets home the house is in a turmoil. Charlotte and two refugees have been arrested for setting fire to mailboxes. Walden goes and gets her out of jail. He has to promise to send her to the country for a while.

The Latines approves his conduct.

Next day Walden leaves <sup>goes to</sup> for Walden Hall - taking Charlotte with him.

Friday

Thursday.

Feliks, once again in desperation, calls on Lydia. He asks her point-blank where <sup>Charlotte</sup> ~~she~~ is. She will not tell him.

Feliks waits all day for Charlotte but she does not come.

+

Next day, back in London, Walden calls on Bonnie. Yes, she did see him the other day, and she has been waiting ever since for him to call. She is now living on her savings, comfortable but rather lonely. They make love. Afterwards she tells him that she knows he is infertile. He says: But I've got a daughter. Bonnie says: When was she born, dear ... exactly?

+

Feliks calls on Lydia once more. ~~He asks her point-blank~~ He asks her where <sup>Charlotte</sup> ~~she~~ is. He says: "All these years I had a daughter - do you realize what you've stolen from me?" She says: "You tried to use me to help you kill <sup>Charlotte</sup> ~~she~~!" They quarrel like lovers who have betrayed one another. At the height of the row they kiss passionately. Lydia breaks away and runs out of the room. The butler brings Feliks his coat. He is forced to leave.

Feliks follows him.

+

When Walden gets home there are three messages.

One is from Churchill, saying that Austria has sent a war ultimatum to Serbia with a 48-hour deadline.

The second is a cable from Moran saying: We accept.

The third is from Pritchard. "Am following Mr. Bern. Come immediately to the Dry Dock in Dryport. Wear my coat."

Walden leaves, wondering as he goes why Lydia did not tell him that "Mr. Bern" had called, and whether there was any connection with what Bonnie said in bed.

SEVEN.

+

When Feliks arrives home he finds a letter from Charlotte. "Moran is here at Walden Hall. Meet me any morning on the bridge path in the woods to the north of the house.

He begins carefully to pack his travel kit into a case.

+

Walden and Pritchard follow Feliks to the railway station. Pritchard gets behind him in the ticket queue and buys one to the same destination - the next town to Walden Hall.

Pritchard gets on the train and establishes where ~~feliks~~<sup>feliks</sup> is sitting, then comes back and gives his ticket to Walden. Walden scribbles a note for Pritchard to take to Churchill, then gets on the train.

The train pulls out.

EIGHT.

+

Churchill gives orders for troops to stop the train and arrest everyone on it. Pritchard gets out Walden's Rolls and drives pell-mell for the place where they plan to stop the train.

+

The train stops on an uphill slope. Feliks looks out and sees it surrounded by soldiers. He gets up and heads for the last carriage. Walden sees him pass and gets up. EIGHT.

Feliks gets into the guard's van, releases the brake, and dynamites the coupling. The van begins to roll (backwards).

Walden leaps the gap and attacks Feliks. They fight. Walden falls off the platform but is not badly hurt.

The runaway carriage gathers speed and bursts through the wooden A. Millicom.

+

Walden is not seriously hurt. Pritchard arrives. The soldiers must search.

+

Feliks stops the carriage and gets off over fields. He reaches the main road. A car comes along. He throws the driver out and takes the car.

+

The soldiers hear about the stolen car. Pritchard and Walden give chase in Walden's Rolls while the police in the Walden Hall area are notified.

+

Feliks has a purchase. He shatters the windscreen of the stolen car and plants the shards in the muddy road.<sup>He hits you now.</sup> Then he heads across country. Before long he steals a horse from a field.

+

Walden & Pritchard drive over the grass and they, too get a purchase. They have to rent a horse-drawn carriage.

+

Feliks arrives in the vicinity of Walden Hall. and hides in the woods.

Chapter NINE.

Charlotte goes riding before breakfast and picks up Feliks in the woods. She gets him back to the stables and then leads him up over the mtn to her wife's hiding place.

+

Pritchard and Walden arrive. A police dragnet is spread throughout the whole area, but of course it does not pick up Feliks who is hiding in the horse.

+

Charlotte tells Feliks that Maria's mom is guarded day and night, does not venture, and he never comes out. However they are going to sign the treaty tomorrow (Saturday) at 3 pm in the Octagon.

+

~~knows~~ Feliks knows Charlotte & suspects Charlotte is helping him.
Lydia comes down from London that day. Walden confronts her with what he has learned from Bonnie. She confesses all. They are reconciled.

+

The house is searched. Feliks has to get out on to the roof. He wakes the searchers.

+

In the night he makes his bank. At 3 a.m. he sneaks down, through the darkness house, to the Ochagon. He hides the bank in a cupboard and wires it to a clock. The bank will go off at 3.10.

Ten.

On Saturday Austin declares war on Jerome.

At 3 when the treaty is signed. At least Charlotte is let out. She goes to Feliks. He says I done it anyway.

Feliks tells Charlotte what he has done. She is horrified. "You can't kill my father!"

Feliks: "He's not your father!"

and leaves.