TENURE VALID?

The concept of a contract for tenure as a life-long commitment has been questioned by the recent ruling of an Iowa district judge that the University of Dubuque had the right to fire a tenured professor in 1972 because of the university's financial problems. Iowa Judge Thomas H. Nelson ruled that once the university had established financial exigency, its actions were not subject to review by the court. He also ruled that the tenured faculty member's contract was "terminable at the will" of either the university or the faculty member, as long as "reasonable notice" was given. ----------

President Gerald Ford signed the omnibus school-aid bill into law August 21. The law contains a new "right of privacy" provision which applies to post-secondary education as well as elementary-secondary education. The provision gives students and parents of students under 18 years of age the right to inspect the student's school file, "including all material that is incorporated into each student's record folder."
