SPACE CHANGES

Look for some major changes in Wickes Hall when classes resume March 8 after the spring break.

The library will be shifted around to provide greater book security and open areas for new books soon to be purchased.

The book check-out counter will be moved to the southwest corner of the library. The reading area in the northwest corner will not be touched, and a new reading and study area will be created in the space now occupied by the periodical stands, which will be condensed into a smaller space. As the book collection increases over the next two years, the southeast study area will be eliminated.

Library changes include closing all entrances to the library except the southwest door. All the doors can be used for exit during an emergency.

The two lavatories on the north wall of the second floor will be in the process of transformation into animal and plant labs for biology. Biology now has no space for the mice and rats needed in class experiments, and no space to raise the necessary plants. The fixtures in the lavatories will be removed, but will be replaced in the future when a new building provides the lab space needed.
