CHRISTMAS IN OTHER LANDS SIMILAR, YET DIFFERENT

Santa Claus undergoes unique costume changes as he travels from country to country. That was a common theme when several foreign students at SVSC compared Christmas in America with their native lands.

In predominately Christian countries, the basics are the same -- the church services, gifts, decorations and family dinners -- but the hows and whys are different.

"In Ecuador the children recognize Santa Claus, but I think he's been imported from the United States," said Jenette Cruz of Quito, her country's capitol. "Our gift giver is the baby Jesus. If children have been good, he will send the three wise men to give gifts." Cruz said the emphasis on the nativity is stronger in her country than in America. "Everyone's home has a nativity scene, and business and schools will have a very elaborate nativity set up in a large room." The 23 year-old finance major does admit to influences from other cultures. "In Ecuador we have no snow, but we decorate our trees so they appear to have it."

Many of the United States' traditions are rooted in Western Europe, but customs there still retain their old-world flavor. Germans start their holiday season earlier than Americans. "On the eve of December 6, children set their boots out on the step so St. Nikolaus can fill them with treats and small gifts," said Susanne Mulorz, a sophomore in secondary education. "He is always dressed as a bishop. On Christmas Eve the Christ Child comes and delivers presents to the children," said the native of Annweiler, a town in southwest Germany.

Birgitt Reynolds, a college secretary from Germany, said there is also a dark side of Christmas for children who've been bad. "Often when someone dressed as St. Nikolous visits homes, he's accompanied by Knecht Ruprecht. An evil figure with a black face, red horns and a tail, Knecht Ruprecht gives bad kids switch brooms. Christmas has three special days in Germany, said Reynolds. "Christmas Eve is spent just with immediate family, Christmas day with relatives, and more relatives and close friends the day after that."

"France is very similar to America," said Jerome Crepatte, a freshman education major from Paris. "There Pere Noel, Father Christmas, delivers presents, but he is jolly, big and red -- just like Santa Claus. We also have a big dinner of dinde (turkey) and chestnuts and drink champagne."

Christmas is much more low key in the Far East, says Hidiki Abe of Tokyo. "There are very few Christians in Japan," said the 27 year-old political science major. "We celebrate the day as a kind of feast, but with no religious meaning. Each home will buy a huge, round Christmas cake and the children get little ones at school. Other than that, it just like any other day for most of us." The United States has made its presence known during the holiday season, Abe adds. "December is becoming more Americanized in Japan. Now some families buy Christmas trees, give presents and cook special foods. Before World War II there was nothing like that."

All of the students agreed that there was nothing in their countries that matched some aspects of Christmas in America. The commercialization of Christmas was the biggest difference they pointed out. "It is amazing how everything starts up right after Thanksgiving," Mulorz said. All the Christmas music and religious programing caught Abe off guard at first, but he has grown to like the holiday season in America. "Everyone is so busy, but happy. They like this time very much."

--Dorothy Horwath, interim director of the library/learning resources center, invites campus participation in providing exhibits for the display cases near the circulation desk. "These exhibits are helpful in our efforts to internationalize the campus," Horwath said. Persons with artifacts, photos, collections, or other materials appropriate for display are asked to contact her at ext. 4236. Each exhibit is left in place for about one month.

ACROSS CAMPUS

-- A research paper by Dr. S. K. "Tom" Yun, chairman of the physics department, will be published in the Physical Review D, a research journal of the American Physical Society. Titled "SU(8) Theory of Multigenerational Grand Unification," the paper presents the theory unifying three generations of quarks and leptons, each generation made of two quarks and two leptons. Yun's work was presented at the annual general meeting of the American Physical Society held in San Francisco in November. He will continue work in this theory and supersymmetry as a visiting professor at the Center for Theoretical Physics at Massachusetts Institute of Technology during his sabbatical leave.

INTERIOR SCHEDULE CHANGES

Due to the holidays, the Interior will not be published again until Tuesday, January 10. Copy deadline is noon on the Wednesday preceding distribution.

CAMPUS HOLIDAY CLOSING

During the periods of December 23 through December 26, and December 30 through January 2, Plant Services personnel will lower building temperatures, reduce hot water temperatures and lighting levels.

We ask for your cooperation and help to insure that all electric heaters, calculators, typewriters and similar office equipment are turned off when you leave for the holidays.

Office temperatures in the Annex units will be reduced to a minimum. Arrangements can be made for plants and other perishable items by calling ext. 4080. Additionally, typewriters will require a 15 minute warm up period before use when you return.

With your help we can save additional energy dollars while enjoying the holidays.

Have a safe and happy holiday season!
