AFFIRMATIVE ACTION OFFICERS GATHER FOR DAY-LONG MEETING

"Current minority education programs are not working. It means those young people may not change. We might have to change in order to make it work."

Those words are from Earl Nelson, director of Minority Equity in the state Department of Education. He was on campus Jan. 29 to speak to a group of state university affirmative action officers about the progress of minority education in state universities.

Nelson addressed the issues of minority university programs and retention, as well as the purpose of the Martin Luther King Jr./Cesar Chavez/Rosa Parks (K/C/P) College Day Program.

He reminded the 12 gathered, including Leroy Hampton, SVSU director of affirmative action, that the current programs must be evaluated and the support programs that do work must be undergirded.

"Every state in the union and every university is recognizing it has a major role (in the education of minorities)," Nelson said. "Commitment is the key to getting this job done. A simple commitment by legislative and college leadership."

Nelson said the K/C/P Program has a tri-fold purpose. The first to create a College Day inviting minorities to college campuses. Once the seventh through 11th graders are on campus, the institution is to inspire the youth, educate them and leave them (Please turn to Page 2)

ISSUES ADDRESSED -- Earl Nelson, right, director of Minority Equity in the state Department of Education, addressed 12 affirmative action officers Jan. 29. Among those gathered, below, were Winston Burt of Grand Valley State University, Catherine Rush of Oakland University, Mary Laub of Michigan Tech, Ralph Bonner of Michigan State University and Jacob Oglesby of Wayne State University.
The second purpose, Nelson continued, is to have more minorities on campus as role models, as visiting people in classrooms and in the community.

The final goal is to provide scholarships and fellowships to minorities.

SVSU is sponsoring a group of Saginaw area youth, who last year visited campus for a full week, experiencing college life. In addition, visiting professors have been on board and scholarships/fellowships have been awarded.
