Lunchtime with the oldies

You could call them old and you could tell them they smell funny. But it probably wouldn't be advisable. These are the men (and women) of the noontime crowd that take over the gymnasium for one hour (give or take a few minutes) each day. They also are the faculty, directors and staff members that help keep this university on its feet -- although they might not be on theirs!

The group will argue they gather daily for camaraderie. Spectators may contend they gather for battle!

"This is just a good time for fun and exercise," said Dr. Gene Hamilton, dean of Continuing Education and International Programs.

Right!

Joe Vogl, director of Conference Bureau and Facilities Scheduling, has both pinky fingers clad in athletic tape and a few short months ago suffered a wound to the mouth and had stitches. Jim Dwyer, director of admissions, sustained a twisted ankle the same week.

"There's actually more injury to egos than anything," claimed Dr. Eric Nisula, professor of music.

Ooops, a little interruption from the sidelines.

"Geez Spreeman, when you get out of the paint you can't play." That from Vogl. The X-rated response from John Spreeman, accountant in the Office of the Controller, is best censored.

The group is divided into teams of five, similar to collegiate-style basketball. That's where the resemblance ends.

The players are older (much?) than college players and there are no referees.

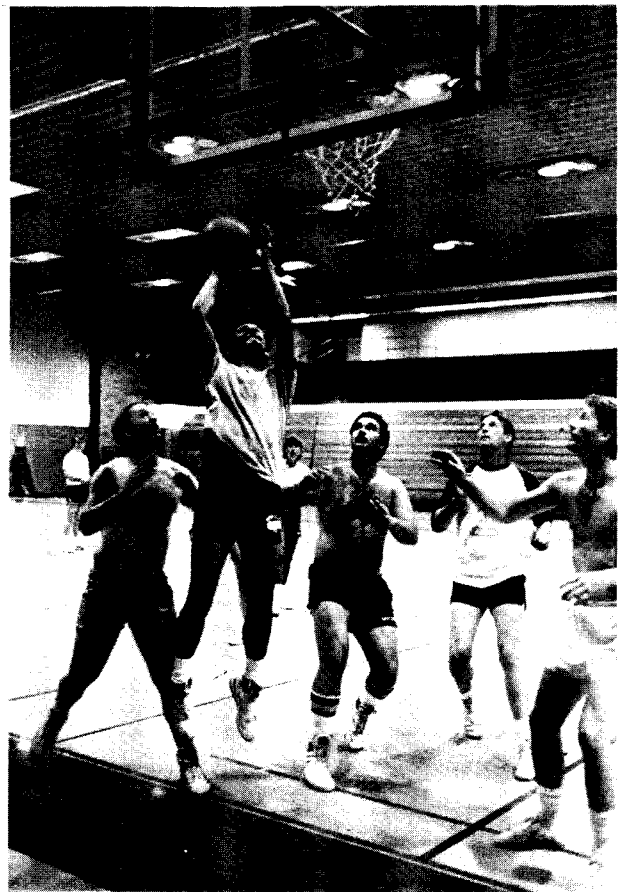

"What? And take the fun out?" chimed Dr. Al Menard, assistant professor of physics.

"Besides, we'd all foul out," added Dave Bertie, athletic trainer.

The teams are called "Shirts" and "Skins." Easy enough. Unless you're Claudette Charney, women's basketball coach, or her assistant Dana Munk.

Charney and Munk are joined by women's basketball standout Rhonda Griffioen.

"Sometimes we're Skins," Charney said. "But we do get to keep our shirts on."

Lee sees 'better days ahead'

"Think about better ways for better days."

A plaque inscribed with those words serves as a motto for Dr. Guy Lee, professor of education. The wooden plaque is squeezed among shelf upon shelf of books relating to teacher education, administration, law and affirmative action -- Lee's fortés.

Lee joined the University in 1970 as the director of student teaching. Since then he has held a number of positions: affirmative action officer, administrative assistant to the president, special assistant to the president and dean of the school of education (1982-1986). Lee said he "retired" as dean of the school of education to return to full-time teaching.

Lee said he has aspirations of returning to K-12 teaching. He spent 14 years in various capacities at that level.

"I'm fascinated by the concept," Lee said. "Very few people have done that. I would have gone full circle."

Lee said his K-12 experience gave him knowledge "based on having been there." He said in particular the seasoning has assisted him in his graduate level instruction.

"I am sensitive to the problems of teachers and administrators. (The experience) is not all from books and theories. I have been a classroom teacher and administrator in an urban setting. This makes the classroom experience much more meaningful for the students."

Lee said the knowledge he acquired during his years of classroom teaching and as an administrator has provided him with an insight into the workings of a good teacher.

"We try to provide students with as realistic a presentation of classroom work as possible," Lee said. That includes field-based experience.

Lee continued to say teaching comes relatively easy to him because he "loves" education.

"It's so important to me that my students understand that," he said. "It means a tremendous amount to me."

That says a lot, coming from a man who first leaned toward dentistry, then medicine. "... Then someone pulled me aside and said he thought I'd be good for teaching and I found I liked it."
